CLAY and COBALT

Talk about a natural wonder: This trending orange paint color takes its inspiration from the unforgettable landscapes of the Southwest. A subtle spin on terra-cotta, it skews more sunbaked clay than cayenne pepper for a near-neutral ideal on walls. Accents veering electric blue create a palette that's as enchanting as a desert mesa under a cloudless sky.

Making Waves

For the look of wallpaper but with total control over the colors, we painted the wall Canyon Ridge then painted ripples in Sun Bleached (both are Better Homes & Gardens™; walmart.com/BHG) using Royal Design Studio Sound Waves Modern stencil.

Orange and blue are opposites on the color wheel, which makes them a can't-miss combination for BHG style director Jessica Thomas. To give the combo a fresh spin, she paired this soft terra-cotta with bright blue accessories. "Cobalt has vibrancy that makes this classic pairing feel modern," she says. If you love the colors but your home skews farmhouse, tweak the tone of the blue. "Rustic rooms may call for darker denim blue accents," Thomas says. "For traditional decor, make it navy."

Living Colors

These clay and cobalt pieces bring in the beauty of the desert at dusk (and are proof that opposites really do attract).

▲ The colors of the Austin Proper Hotel in Texas “are warm, inviting, and a bit Western, just like the city itself,” says its designer Kelly Wearstler. Get the look with “pieces in a similar color family but different textures, patterns, and materials,” she says.
